

8675

QUERIES

Recommended to the

AUTHORS

OF THE

Late DISCOURSE

OF

Free Thinking.

By a CHRISTIAN.

Benjamin Hooley A.M. R. of S^t Peter's

The Second Edition.

L O N D O N,

Printed for James Knapton, at the Crown in St. Paul's Church-Yard. 1713.

Price Four Pence.

QUERIES

Recommended to the AUTHORS, &c.

Qu. I. WHether that can be justly called Free-Thinking,
which is manifestly Thinking

with the utmost Slavery, and the strongest Prejudices against every Branch, and the very Foundation, of all Religion.

II. Whether, if all the Absurdities of Physicians, from the time of the first Professor of that Art, were collected into one Body, it could justly be esteemed a good Argument for the total Abolition of all Physick.

III. Whether the false Mony that is put upon Men sometimes, hinders them from believing that there is any good Coin; or from accepting it, when it is offered them.

A 2

IV. Whe-

IV. Whether, therefore, the feign'd Miracles, and false Pretences of many to Inspiration, and divine Commission, be an Argument against the Truth of any such thing.

V. Whether all that is quoted by these Authors out of Bishop Taylor, and several others, doth not furnish an excellent Argument for all Believers in Jesus Christ, to bear with one another's Differences: And whether it be not very unjust to extend that to the prejudice of the Foundations of all Religion, which good Men have spoken with an hearty concern against the ill Temper, and the Violences, of Bigots; and which was designed, and tends directly, to the Preservation and Security of those Foundations.

VI. Whether this, as well as the ranking some of these Men themselves with Atheists and Infidels, be not a very ungrateful and base return to their noble Endeavours, and hearty Zeal, against the Abuses of Religion; and all Superstition, Inhumanity, and Church-Tyranny.

VII. Whether the Follies, and Inconsistencies, and ridiculous Opinions, of many Christians, or Divines, pick'd up in the Course of above 1600 Years, can in Justice be produced, as Arguments against all

all Religion, any more than the differences amongst Philosophers, can be an Argument against Reason it self, and every thing in Philosophy; or than the differences amongst Atheists, and particularly the Absurdities in Epicurus's System, will be allowed by these Authors to conclude against Atheism it self.

VIII. Whether such Representations of Christianity, and such positive Assertions, as run through this Treatise, to the Prejudice and Condemnation of all Religion, and particularly of the Belief of a future State, do not too evidently shew, that the design of it was, not to incite Men to an impartial Examination, but, to influence Men to the utter Condemnation, of all Religion.

IX. Whether it be a sign of greater Knowledge, or Honesty, to represent Solomon as an Infidel, because he introduceth an Infidel speaking; to represent Him as denying a future State, who talks so plainly in the same Book of a Judgment; to represent Him as an Enemy to the fear of God, (which is in this Treatise, without distinction, called Superstition,) whose repeated Maxim it is, That the fear of the Lord is the beginning of Wisdom; and whose Conclusion in that Free-Thinking Treatise Treatise of Ecclesiastes, is, That to fear God and to keep his Commandments, is the whole of Man.

X. Whether it be a sign of that Integrity which Infidelity produceth, to represent that Fear of God, which hath nothing servile nor terrifying in it ; which is nothing but such a Reverence as directs, and secures Men's Obedience to his Laws, upon the same Foot with that Fear of the Gods amongst the Heathen, which was indeed Superstition, and which taught Men to have no other Notion of their superiour Beings, but that of Tyrannical, Cruel, Barbarous Lords, delighted with the Blood, Misery, and Torments, of their Votaries.

XI. Whether this, and this only, be not that fear of the Gods, which Plutarch, and the best Heathen Writers expose ; and whether the Love of God, as the Sovereign Good, ought not to have been mention'd as the Principle of Plutarch, as well as his Zeal against the Fear of God falsely represented.

XII. Whether any thing can justify such a procedure against the Christian Religion, as is seen from one end of this Treatise to the other ; but particularly in that impartial and honest Note about Solomon, Solomon, introduced with an Air of solemn Banter, and made as remarkable as possible: And whether these Authors can give any greater Instance of Prevarication, or hiding Truth, in the worst of those whom they oppose, than is to be seen in this Passage: In which the Gospel is represented, I will venture to say, against their own Judgments, in the worst Dress of its worst Interpreters; and that Doctrine of Eternal Damnation of Mankind for the Sin of Adam, made the Fundamental of the Gospel, which these Authors themselves do not believe to have any Foundation in the Gospel; and such a particular Explication of the Trinity, and Satisfaction, expressly laid upon the Gospel it self, as they themselves know, and believe, never to have been delivered by our Lord, or his Apostles. Now, can any thing be more disingenuous? Or is there need of any greater proof, that the design of these Authors, was not to invite to Examination; but to charge upon Christianity it self those Absurdities, which are to be found only in some modern Systems of Divinity?

XIII. Whether it be not of a piece with this, to speak of an universal Alteration of the Gospels, under the Emperor Anastasius, upon the Authority of an obscure Passage, which cannot be proved to imply any thing more than that some polite Scholars had a mind to publish the Gospel-History in a better and more beautiful Style; or something like this. Whether these Authors be not Scholars enough to know that Idiotis Evangelistis, could not then signify Idiot Evangelists, in the Sense in which we now use that word for Natural Fools; but only Men without polite Learning. If they be not; whether they should pretend to translate, and make Quotations. If they be; whether any thing can excuse such barbarous Usage,

XIV. Whether these Authors themselves can say; that the Gospels now in our Hands are any thing like a Book mended, and beautified, by a polite Scholar; nay, whether it be not apparent that they are the same which were quoted, and appealed to, before Anastasius's time; and whether the simplicity, and freedom from Art, and Cunning, and Trick, which so often accompany Polite Humane Learning, be not an advantage on the
the

the side of Writers, who profess to relate only Matters of Fact; and ought not to be esteemed a good Argument in their Favour.

XV. Whether it be not a very great mark of the impartial Regard of these Authors to Truth, that they produce the various Readings of the several remaining Manuscripts of the New Testament; with a manifest design of bringing a Disreputation upon the Gospel it self; quoting for this purpose, and seemingly, (though there is reason to think, not really,) approving the opinion of one Divine, founded upon no good Reasons. For, let the various Readings be never so many, the Questions are, whether they disturb the sense of the place to which they belong; whether they do not often help to fix it; whether any one point, made necessary by our Lord or his Apostles, be in the least affected by them; and whether, in the whole, they do not afford to all impartial Enquirers, a very strong and convincing Argument in favour of the Gospel; being Proofs of a vast number of Copies, Translations, and Citations, of these Books, more than of any other,

B

other, with varieties so little material, with respect to the principal Points, and the main Matters, recommended to the World in these Books.

XVI. Again, whether it becomes true Enquirers, or Examiners, to allege, as of prejudice to Christianity, the Disputes about the Time, when the Books of the New Testament were formally all put into one Body; and universally received. What is this to true Christianity, which doth not depend upon modern Notions, either of Inspiration, or Canonicalness? Is it not true, and ought it not to have been acknowledged, that if we have faithful credible Accounts of what Jesus taught, and what he requires, this is sufficient for the Being, and Security, of Christianity: whensoever the particular Books of the New Testament, were collected. How unfairly then are Matters represented, as if Christianity depended upon the time when such a number of Books were gathered together into one Authentic Volume, by persons who know very well that it depends only upon this, whether the Gospels are not a credible account of Jesus Christ; and whether we ought ought not, upon that account, to receive him as sent by God? And, under this Head, ought it not to have been acknowledged by such great Pretenders to the Love of Truth, that, whatever Disputes there were about other Books, not only the Gospels, but the Acts, and St. Paul's Epistles, which give us a noble View of Christianity, were always uncontested Books?

XVII. Whether Epicurus's Atheism, and Infidelity, (which are acknowledged to have been founded upon Nonsense, and Absurdity,) can with any Justice be produced as a noble Instance of Free-Thinking, by those who themselves think the Grounds he went upon not to be worthy of any Man who can Think at all: And whether this be not a sign that Atheism, as Atheism, though without Foundation, is esteemed by some Men an excellent Recommendation.

XVIII. Whether it be not ridiculous, as well as absurd, to pass by the noble Beneficence, and universal Love and Friendship, recommended and required by the Christian Religion, and practis'd by the first Christians; and to extol Epicurus as carrying Morality to an higher pitch in the case of Friendship, under pretense that the word Friendship, in a particular restrained Sense, is not in the New Testament; in order to magnify this absurd Philosopher, to pass by the Life and Death of Jesus Christ, the greatest Instance of Friendship (were he considered only as a Philosopher) and not to say a word here, in favour of his Doctrine, though it was chiefly designed to introduce an universal Friendship, and Beneficence; and in general, every thing of good repute, or every thing justly esteemed amongst Men.

XIX. Whether it doth not shew great impartiality, to put Tully into the same List with Epicurus, whom he constantly pursued as an Enemy to Humane Society, and to Truth. Whether it be Ignorance, or resolute Wilfulness, to represent Him sily as an Atheist, and expressly as an Enemy to the Immortality of the Soul, (which he constantly maintains :) and that upon such weak Grounds as these,

1. Because

1. Because he gives this as an Instance of a probable Opinion, That they who study Philosophy don't believe there are any Gods: Whereas probabile in Cicero, or any other good Latin Author, never signifies probable in our modern Sense; but only an Opinion that will bear a disputation, or that may be debated. Besides, that this is acknowledged by these same Authors to respect only such Gods as the common People then worshipp'd.

2. Because, in his Tusculan Questions, after having mentioned the various Notions of Philosophers about the Nature of the Soul, He concludes from them, that there can be nothing after Death: than which there cannot be imagined a more ignorant, or a more insincere, Representation. For he only reckons up the Opinions of some of the Philosophers. Nor doth He conclude this, as his own opinion; but only observes, that, according to the opinion of those he had then named, there could be nothing after Death. According to these opinions, saith he, there is nothing after Death. His sententiis omnibus, &c. And yet he is here represented as drawing his own Picture; when he is only only drawing that of some others. Just as if any one who should set down the opinions of Hobbs and Spinoza, with what follows from them, should be charged with making that Conclusion in his own Name, and not in theirs.

3. Because in a disputation, in his Tusculan Questions, He denies, and was understood by his Auditor to deny, the Immortality of the Soul. Whereas it is plain to any one who understands Latin, and Sense, that He only, for the present, drops Plato's Arguments for the Soul's Immortality, and endeavours to convince his Opponent of an Error, even supposing, for the present, the Soul not to be Immortal. For his Words there, prætermittamus, and relinquamus, are such as can signify nothing but dropping the Argument for the present: and this, because he thought he could carry his point without it. Nor are they proper Words for one to use, who designed absolutely to deny the thing. The answer of his Opponent, or Auditor, is only an Embellishment to the Dialogue. He could not bear the thoughts of losing so pleasing a view, as that of the Immortality of the Soul, even for the present:

present : And therefore He useth a very beautiful Expostulation ; and lets Him know that, even supposing it an Error, he could not part with it. Nay, his answer implies that Cicero himself had been the Instrument of his believing and expecting such an Immortality. It cannot surely be collected from hence by any, but such as are resolved to have it so, that Cicero could mean absolutely to deny, what he had taught his Auditor to expect ; or any thing more than to lay aside, for the present, those Arguments, as his own Words imply ; and this, for the farther Prosecution and Embellishment of his Dialogue. But because these Authors speak with so much respect of this Great Man ; and have taken upon them to teach us all, how to understand him, by a Key which seems peculiar to themselves : I would farther ask, whether they ever read his Treatise, called Cato Major ; whether in that He doth not profess to speak his own Thoughts under the Person of Cato ; whether He speaks in that like a Man who absolutely rejected Plato's Arguments, or like one highly pleased, and satisfied, with them ; whether that noble Sentence which begins,

O præclarum illum diem, &c; could be said by any Man, but One, not only possess'd, but ravish'd, with the glorious Hope, and Expectation, of Immortality; and whether this Treatise of Cicero's be not alone enough to convince us that the Free-Thinking of those, who can thus represent His Sense, is either No Thinking at all; or, Thinking with the utmost Slavery and Prejudice. For otherwise, how could This, and all that he saith in many other places, be over-looked; and He be set forth, not only as a Man of sense enough, to examine popular Errors, but as a down-right Infidel and Atheist? Whoever considers what is here said, of the usage this excellent Writer hath met with from these Authors; together with their translating Latin Words merely by their Sound, as Probabile, Probable; Religio, Religion, in our modern Sense; and the like; will also easily determine whether they understand Tully themselves; or are fit to direct others with what Bias to read him; or whether any of them are qualified to give us a New Edition of that Noble Author.

XX. Who-

XX. Whether any thing can be imagined more unjust, or more absurd, than the Usage given to Socrates by the same Authors. In one Page they give a noble Account of his Death, out of Erasmus ; from which it is plain, that He had such a Belief of a God, and such an Expectation of a Reward in a Future State, as supported Him under all the Injuries of his Adversaries, and under the Terrors of Death it self. But, for fear that this should go for a Proof of his being a Religious Man, and a Believer ; (which it must do amongst all who can think ;) in the very next Page, in order to take off that Impression, He is represented as discouraging all Enquiries into Heavenly Things : An expression used, we know, amongst Christians, and in the New Testament it self, for the good things of a Future State. That is, Socrates in one Page is represented as professing Himself to have lived with a constant desire of pleasing God ; and to die, with good Hopes of being happy in a Future State : And in the next Page is introduced as calling all Fools, who troubled themselves with Enquiries into Heavenly Things ; which to be sure
C these

these Authors would have to be understood in the common Acceptation of that Phrase ; and which they allege as a Proof, that Socrates did not make Notions a part of his Religion. That He made the Notions of a God, and of a Future State, i. e. of Heavenly Things, in our common Style, a part of his Religion, is plain from the account these Authors give us of what He said when He was dying : And that this Sentence here quoted to the contrary, hath no manner of relation to the contrary, will appear to any, who have a little Sense, and so much Free-Thinking left, as will permit them to look into the place of Xenophon here quoted ; which is indeed as unaccountably, and as miserably, misrepresented as any thing can be. Xenophon is there vindicating Socrates from all appearance of Impiety. For He never, saith He, as many others did, troubled himself to discover how that which the Sophists call'd the World, came into being ; and by what necessary Causes, (ἀναγκαίως) every one of the heavenly Things was made. Nay, He endeavoured to prove those, who troubled themselves about such Things, to be Fools. Let these Authors consider consider, that the Persons whom He thus stigmatized, were Disputers about the Necessary Causes of the Universe, and of the Heavenly Bodies; that these were the Heavenly Things which He thought it absurd in Men (who have not Capacities for such Enquiries) to concern themselves about; and that the Humane Things which He recommended at the same time, were all things which are of real Use and Importance to Mankind. Not Humane Things, in opposition to Heavenly Things, in the Religious Sense of the Phrase; But Humane Things, in opposition to Enquiries about the Necessary Causes of the Universe, and the Heavenly Bodies, and other things; which were accounted by Socrates, not Humane, as being of no Importance to the Happiness of Man, and wholly out of the reach of a Creature so little acquainted with the Nature of things as Man is; and which are, in the next Sentence, called ἀσυστά, i. e. not Divine Things, in the common Sense of the Words amongst us, but Things belonging to God, who alone fully knows, and comprehends, the Causes of all things. These things of Humane Concernment, Xenophon reckons up in a Paragraph very near to this here quoted; viz. Enquiries about the moral and political Virtues: to which He adds, And about other things, which those who knew, were esteemed by Socrates excellent, and good Men; and those who did not know, to deserve no better Name than that of the lowest Slaves. And least we should exclude out of this Number, the Notion of a God, we may learn, in the next Paragraph but One, how strict an observer of an Oath Socrates was; and in that which follows, the Reason of this: Viz. because Socrates had this Notion of the Gods, That they knew all things, either spoken, or done, or so much as deliberated upon in Silence: which perhaps may prove, even to these Authors, that Socrates made some sort of Notions, and Speculations, a part of his Religion.

But to return, whence my concern for this excellent Man hath carried me, What can be plainer, than that Socrates expressly condemns Enquiries about Necessity, and such like things, which He thought of no importance to Man? And whom doth this touch, so much as those who produce Him to another purpose? What can be plainer, than that his Moral

Moral Excellencies were founded upon, and improved by, his believing that God is, and that He is a Rewarder of those who seek him? What can be plainer, than that He is the greatest Advocate in the Heathen World, for the Necessity, and Advantage, of minding Heavenly Things, in a Religious Sense? And lastly, what can be plainer, than that He, as well as others, hath been grossly misrepresented, after such a manner as cannot be excused, unless it be by this, that some Men are persuaded that all Methods are lawful for propagating so good a Cause, as that of Infidelity, and Atheism; or, that there is a Blind Zeal, and Implicit Bigottry, in this, as well as in Popery.

XXI. Whether it be not very unjust to apply the general Sayings of that great Man, my Lord Bacon, about that Suspicion of some Relations in History, which a true natural Historian ought to have; to the Prejudice of all Religion: And to lead the Reader to judge that he had the same Suspicion of all Miracles, which he expresseth of the Prodigies recorded by Livy.

XXII. Whe-

XXII. Whether Mr Hobbs's several false Opinions, and High-Church Politicks, here laid to his charge by these Authors, be not, in their own opinion, as great a mark of his Slavish-Thinking, as his Atheism is, of his Free-Thinking: And whether the producing Him in this Catalogue, with that censure, be not an Argument that Atheism and Infidelity are the things truly meant, however now and then colour'd over.

XXIII. Whether these Authors can ever make Reparation for the Injury done to the Memory of that great and good Man Arch-Bishop Tillotson, by putting him into the same List with Epicurus, and Mr Hobbs, against both whom he hath expressed himself with so particular a Severity in some parts of his Works; and by thus doing the work of his worst and bitterest Enemies. Whether his Example had not better have been imitated, than his Memory thus blackened; and the Abuses of Religion charged only upon the Abusers, and not upon Religion it self. Whether his Zeal against Atheism, and Infidelity, might not have been mentioned; as well as his Zeal against Spiritual Tyranny, and Unchristian Cruelty. Whether the Injury done by these Authors to his great Name, be not already apparent, when a Conscientious Author hath already taken an handle from them, to misrepresent him in the grossest manner: contrary to the whole Tenour of that Sermon in which he speaks of the Mischiefs of Popish Zeal; and contrary to his expresse Declarations concerning the Christian Religion, which He in the same Sermon vindicates from the least shadow of Guilt upon that account. But, as it was to these Authors purpose, to rank this good dead Man in such Company: so is it to the purpose of his Popish, and other furious Enemies, that He, who could not enter into their blind and unchristian Measures, should pass for an Atheist, and an Infidel. So mutually do Atheism and Popery assist one another!

XXIV. Whether, upon the whole, considering the unfair Treatment Religion hath met with from these Authors; the false Representations made use of to its Disadvantage; the little idle Stories pick'd up and vented; the great Scandal such such Treatises must give to all serious Persons ; the great Handle they afford to all the Enemies of true Liberty of Conscience, for their unchristian Treatment of those who differ from them : considering (I say) all this, whether there may not be some ground for Suspicion, that there are, amongst these Authors, some of the Enemies to true Liberty, and impartial Examination ; than whom no Persons are more rejoiced at such Performances as this.

XXV. Whether the Thanks of all Friends to true Religion, and true Freedom of thought, will not be due to these prudent and worthy Authors ; if occasion should be taken, from this Licentious Treatise, to destroy all Liberty in Religion ; and to lay the Foundation of Popery amongst us.

XXVI. Supposing Atheism to be better, in it self, than that Superstition which tortures a Man's own Breast, and sets the World about him in Flames ; whether, nevertheless, a thorough Belief of an over-ruling Providence, and a State to come, and of the Truth of Christianity, nity, and a Conquest of our Passions founded upon this Belief, and a practice of all the lovely Virtues of the Gospel, be not vastly preferable to both; full of the Supports which Atheism explodes, and void of the Torments which Superstition feels.

XXVII. Last of all, whether there can be any thing in Atheism, (as there certainly is in true Religion,) to hinder any Man from acting the part of the most Superstitious and fiery Zealot upon Earth. Are not all the Cruelties and Barbarities, so justly complained of, in *Poper*y, supported by the Atheism of those who profess it, and of many of those who exercise those very Cruelties? Do not these Authors think that many of the Inquisitors themselves have been Atheists, as well as Jews? Will they not be ready to own, that many of the Popes, Cardinals, and Bishops, have been Atheists? And is it not their Atheism and Infidelity, which hath led them to maintain and support that Usurpation over Men's Consciences, which is so much for their own worldly Interest? Is there any thing to hinder

D

an

an Atheist from professing Popery, in order to obtain a Crown, or a Mitre: and then, from using his Power for the promoting of the same Popery? Can it be determined, at this Hour, certainly, whether the whole Scheme of the Power, and Tyranny, and Persecution, of a neighbouring Monarch, hath not been owing to Atheism, more than to Bigotry? What should hinder an Atheist from professing and acting the Bigot? What should hinder an Atheist, born with a little more Fire than ordinary in his Constitution, when it is for his present Interest, from ruining Nations and Kingdoms: and all under pretense of God's Glory, and Zeal for the Church? How then shall Atheism, or Infidelity, put a stop to the madness of Zeal; when the Atheist and Infidel are themselves the Zealots? How shall Atheism give up the vast Revenues of Religious Houses, which are here complained of, when Atheists themselves turn Abbots, and Abbesses? How shall Atheism put a stop to Persecution; when the chief Persecutors are too probably Atheists themselves? And what hope can we have of any Alteration in the World, for the the better: unless we can persuade Men to be Free-Thinkers without Atheism, as well as Believers without Superstition; that is, Christians indeed, upon the Foundation laid by Jesus Christ, and not upon the Authority of any Church, or Man, upon Earth? Can it be said that this would make; either particular Persons, or humane Society, unhappy? Or can we possibly hope for the like relief from Atheism, and Infidelity? And to what purpose then are Atheism, and Superstition so often compared; when it is so plain that, in these last Ages, it is the Atheist chiefly who hath acted the Superstitious; the Zealot; the Inquisitor; and the Tyrant?

D.

POST-

POSTSCRIPT.

THE Author of these Queries confesseth that some of the Particulars mentioned in them, as designed plainly against the Belief of Christianity, are produced in the Treatise of Free-Thinking, under the specious Pretense of their being good Reasons, and Occasions, for a free and impartial Examination; and not expressly declared to be intended against the Gospel, in the same Passages, in which the Authors of that Treatise produce them. But, as these Authors themselves, He verily believes, would inwardly laugh at any who should suppose them to have had any other view in this performance: So, lest any of their less heedful Readers should be led to think them too hardly dealt with, in being taxed expressly with such a Design, they are desired to consider the following Particulars; which, though, in great Part, already mentioned in the Queries themselves, yet, deserve now to be placed altogether, in order to be seen at one view, for the better Determination of this Point,

I. When

1. When Difficulties, and Objections, relating to any thing in the Bible, or Religion, are produced out of Excellent Authors; no mention is made of the Design of those Authors, or of the Answer they themselves make to any Abuse which may be made of such Difficulties. The Story of mending the Gospels, is produced out of Dr. Mills: but not a word said of his Vindication of the Gospels now in our Hands, from that Imputation; and the like perpetually.

2. No favourable Word, concerning the Gospel it self, is spoken, which doth not look more like Banter, than the Sense of the Writers. As, our most Holy Faith, and the like, when there is least Reason to think them serious.

3. Many sly Insinuations, at the same time, are drop'd against it: even where the Difficulties cannot possibly touch the Foundation upon which that stands.

4. The Evangelists are called Idiots by these Authors. I say, By Them: Because the Word which they have so translated signifies no such thing.

5. The Note about Solomon, is a standing Proof, that their real Design was to ridicule the Gospel: laying those things upon the Gospel, which they do not believe to be in

in it; and proposing a wonderful Scheme, as they call it, as the great End of the Gospel-Revelation.

6. Lest we should be at a Loss what is intended under the Cover of impartial Examination, (which no Man of Sense can oppose,) styl'd, in the Cant of these Authors, Free-Thinking; we are presented with a Catalogue of Free-Thinkers, which hath several Things in it worthy of Observation. As,

1. Socrates represented as an Enemy to all Enquiries into Heavenly Things; though the greatest Instance of Faith, in the Heathen World.

2. Epicurus produced as a distinguish'd Free-Thinker; who banished Providence, that is, God, out of the World, by the most absurd System that ever enter'd into the Brain of Man; and who can have no other pretense to this Title, but his Atheism.

3. Cicero applauded under this Name; and, to prove him a Free-Thinker, (that we may not be at a loss what is meant,) great Zeal is shewn, to distort many Passages in his Writings, in order to prove Him to have had no Belief of the Immortality of the Soul; and this, I say, expressly against those who cite Him as an Enemy to Free-Thinking, pag. 138. where Free-Thinking certainly signifies, Infidelity.

4. Sq-

4. Solomon represented as a Free-Thinker, no otherwise than by being represented as no Believer of the Creation of the World ; or of the Immortality of the Soul ; or of a Future State. Here again Free-Thinking doth not signify Examination ; but Infidelity.

5. Synesius a Free-Thinker, merely as an Infidel about the Resurrection.

6. Mr. Hobbs a great Instance of Free-Thinking, pag. 170. notwithstanding his several false Opinions, particularly in Politics. On no other Account, possibly, can He be produced, under this Title, but for his known Atheism : And particularly, He is a great Instance of Free-Thinking, with these Authors, because He hath furnished them with Arguments to prove, that there can be no such thing as Free Thinking in the World ; but that all Thoughts, and Actions, are the necessary Effect of Matter and Motion. Excellent Freedom of Thought !

After this, let any one doubt, if He can, what sort of Free-Thinking, all that is produced in the first Part of this Treatise, is designed to promote ; or suppose it possible, that the chief View of these Authors could be any other, than the Promoting that Free Thinking, which they themselves contend to be Atheism, and Infidelity.

F I N I S.

BOOKS Printed for James Knapton, at the Crown in St. Paul's Church-Yard.

- M R. Hoody of Conformity, and Defence of Episcopacy, pr. 6 s.
- His Sermons, concerning the Terms of Acceptance with God, pr. 5 s.
- Measures of Submission, pr. 3 s. 6 d.
- Original and Institution of Civil Government, pr. 5 s.
- Dr. Clark's Sermons at Mr. Boyle's Lectures for 1704, and 1705, pr. 6 s.
- Paraphrase on the four Evangelists; in 2 Volumes, pr. 12 s.
- Three Practical Essays, pr. 1 s.
- Letter to Mr. Dodwell, with 4 Defenses of it, and a Letter to Amintor, pr. 5 s. Bound.
- Sermon before the Queen, of Love, and Charity —
- At the Lady Cook's Funeral, pr. 2 d.
- Before the House of Commons, pr. 2 d.
- Before the Queen the 8th of March, pr. 2 d.
- At St. James's Nov. 7, 1710. pr. 3 d.
- The Government of Passion, before the Queen, pr. 3 d.
- Scripture Doctrine of the Trinity, pr. 6 s.
- Jacobi Robaulti Physica. pr. 8 s.
- Grotius de Veritate, with all the Notes in English, pr. 3 s.
- Dr. Wells's Tracts against the Dissenters, pr. 3 s. 6 d.
- Letter against Swearing, pr. 2 d.
- Visitation Sermon, pr. 2 d.
- Hist. Geog. of the Old and New Testament, in four Vol. pr. 1 l. 4 s.
- Paraphrase on the Galatians, and Ephesians, pr. 2 s.
- On the Romans, pr. 2 s. 6 d.
- On the Church Catechism, pr. 6 d.
- Prayers on common Occasions, pr. 6 d.
- Young Gentleman's Astronomy, Chronology, and Dyaling, pr. 6 s.
- Harmonia Grammatica, pr. 1 s. 6 d.
- Mr. Bennet's Abridgment of the Cases against the Dissenters, pr. 4 s.
- Paraphrase on the Common Prayer, pr. 4 s.
- Rights of the Clergy, pr. 5 s.
- Letter to Mr. Robinson, pr. 2 s. 6 d.
- Second Letter to Mr. Robinson, pr. 1 s.

